STOCKYARDS TEAM WON FROM
MARYVILLE BY SCORE OF 7-2

Game Was Close for First Six Innings, Then St. Joseph Tied the Score and Made More Runs.

Maryville dropped the opening game of its season at home here Sunday to the Stockyards team of St. Joseph, 7 to 2. The visitors trailed until the seventh, when they tied the score, and in the next frame, added three more, on a home run by Cox with two men on base. A crowd of 600 saw the game. Mayor Garrett threw out the first ball and Secretary George A. Pickens caught the ball. A band played during the game. Ten motor cars of rooters accompanied the St. Joseph men.

Shaner hurled for the visitors, and Garland was on the mound for Maryville. Each struck out 12 men, but the Maryville hurler allowed 12 hits, while the St. Joseph hurler gave only 7, well scattered.

The game was close for the first six innings. Maryville scored first, counting one in the fifth. The visitors tied in their half of the sixth, and Maryville put another across.

That ended the Maryville scoring but the St. Josephs tied the score in the seventh, and then collected three runs in the eighth, when Cox with two men on, hit a circuit drive. Shaner followed with a triple. In the last frame the visitors chalked up two more runs. Score:

ADKINS CASE WAS REVERSED
BY THE SUPREME COURT

Arson Case Tried in Circuit Court Here in Which Mark Adkins Was Convicted Was Overruled.

Prosecuting Attorney Charles F. McCaffrey and Wright & Ford recovered word Sunday that the case of the State against Mark M. Adkins had been reversed by the supreme court.

All of the judges concurring in the decision. Adkins was tried in the circuit court here in February, 1919, on a charge of arson in the third degree, being charged with setting fire to the garage of James Hornbuckle and Elbert Pence at Clairmont. The jury found Adkins guilty and assessed his punishment at four years in the penitentiary. An appeal was taken to the supreme court by the defendant.

The Adkins case was one of the hotly contested cases in circuit court for several years. Assisting Prosecuting Attorney McCaffrey in the case were Shinnabar, Blagg & Ellison, Cook & Cummings, and W. G. Sawyers, who was prosecuting attorney at the time Adkins was arrested. Defending Adkins were Wright & Ford and Judge W. C. Ellison.

It is thought that the decision of the supreme court means the discharge of Adkins. The attorneys here are anxiously waiting for the opinion of the court.

BACCALAUREATE
SERMON TO CLASS

DELIVERED BY REV. MR. HOLLIDAY SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

WE MUST LEARN TO LIVE

Scholarship Is Not An End, But the Means to An End, Said Mr. Holliday in His Address.

The annual baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of the State Teachers College was delivered Sunday afternoon at the College auditorium by the Rev. R. C. Holliday, pastor of the South Methodist church of this city. His subject was, "The Fine Art of Right Living."

Mr. Holliday said in part:

"The night, all of whose hours the divine Master had spent in prayer had passed and now it was day. It was graduation day for a class of twelve men, who, having been trained and tempered, were accorded a new degree and charged with new responsibility. So did these twelve disciples become apostles."

"A disciple is a learner; an apostle is a teacher. A disciple follows the science of learning to know; an apostle pursues the art of telling what he knows. These two words, disciple and apostle, cover all the areas of an education, with respect to both its acquirement and its use."

"The disciple must ever approach his task with the scientific mind seeking to learn the truth; the apostle goes to his work with the passion of an artist seeking to make others know and receive the truth he has learned."

"Looking at the bush burning with fire and yet not consumed, Moses with true scientific instinct said, 'I will now turn aside and see this great sight, why the bush is not burned.' This attitude of mind led to his discovery of God. He knew how to turn aside from the ordinary, and so God gave him a commission, saying, 'I will send thee that thou mayest bring forth my people out of Egypt.' Thus the disciple became an apostle."

"Apostleship means the intensifying of discipleship, and if a school is a place where we may learn, then the whole world is a school, and our school days continue throughout life."

"Some years later, there graduated from this school of Jesus, Paul, also receiving the degree of apostle, and the words of the second verse of scripture I quoted are the expression of his conception of life. Did you note the thrilling climax? We are workers, we are workers together, we are workers together with God."

"So learning is not all. It is not (Continued on next page)"

NO APPARENT CHANGE

Relative to Positions of the Eight Avowed Presidential Candidates Borah on Platform Committee.

Chicago, June 7. -- It was definitely decided today the Republican national convention will be called to order tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock, Central Standard time. The duration of the first session will probably be not more than three hours.

There was no apparent change relative to the positions of eight avowed Senator Lodge of Massachusetts was selected to act as temporary chairman of the Republican national convention and to make the keynote speech.

Republican presidential candidates early today. Without doubt the most significant feature of the pre-convention development is the appearance of Senator Borah of Idaho as a member of the resolutions committee which will build the party's platform. There had been talk for several days that opponents of Senator Johnson proposed to keep Borah out of the platform situation but he "breached in" with no apparent difficulty.

Fight to Unseat Baker.

The fight to unseat Jacob Babler, national committeeman from Missouri, opened here today when the delegation was called together for a caucus. James Munniss and Col. Davis, candidates for United senator, and Arthur Hyde, a candidate for governor, were leading the fight against Babler. Chairman Schmol of the delegation, declared he would vote for Johnson in the second battle.

enough to live to learn, we must learn to live. Scholarship is not an end, but a means to an end. It is not enough to be scientists, we must be artists as well.

"And we must learn to work together. Without cooperation, there can be no civilization, and it is the great task of Christianity to teach men to work together, and to esteem each other very highly for their work's sake. How well these graduates wrought is witnessed by the complaint of the conservatives of that day, when they said, 'Behold, these men are turning the whole world upside down.' There are many things in the world today that need to be upset, and many things that need to be righted, and I could wish that the hosts of young people coming forth out of our colleges at this season of the year might so work together that every injustice and blighting wrong would be banished from the world.

"But man reaches his highest and best, when he learns to work with God. The Christian's God is the greatest worker in the universe, and the worship of a God that works has made the great nations of the world. We should work with God in the building of our own lives, and in the performance of the tasks of life.

"Now, would it spoil the beauty of this occasion if I point out a tragedy in this graduating class to which I have invited your attention? One of these twelve men, somewhere along the course of his discipleship lost touch with his Master, and forgot the ideals this Master had held before him, and his failure was complete and overwhelming. So I remind you that the possibility of failure is ever before you, and I hope you will so keep the lessons and ideals, that you have received in this great institution, before you that your life will honor the men and women who have taught you, and the institution that honors you with this degree today."

THE FIRST ROBIN

By NELL ADAIR.

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

They sat on the platform before the little faraway station, vainly trying to veil their impatience. The girl in a modish spring suit, swinging her shoes with their pearl-colored spats to and fro, as she perched on the end of a hand car, while the man strode up and down in his high-topped rubber boots. The girl glanced askance at the rubber boots and the flannel shirt without a collar; she was not accustomed to friendliness with men of so rough appearance.

But in this desolate spot friendly companionship seemed necessary to slay one's fears of solitude. Why in the world had Elizabeth urged her visit at this time when muddy roads made auto-riding an impossibility?

Elizabeth should have considered that the junction would be far from a pleasing spot in which to pass a waiting hour. It would be at least an hour, the smoky station agent had told her, before the next train came in. Nora Dean had been the only passenger to leave the incoming car at the junction. The patch of meadow land before the engine station was almost sunken in the spring flow from the lake. Nora gazed dolefully out to where other car tracks stretched beyond. Presently the big man gave an exclamation, and stood stiff before the hand-car.

"Well," he said cheerfully, "a robin. The first robin of spring, I believe."

Nora relaxed her stiffness to follow his pointing finger.

"It's the first robin I have seen." The man returned her smile and Nora saw that the face under the soft hat was a fine face after all.

"You might make a wish," he ventured pleasantly. "A wish made when viewing the first robin of spring is supposed to come true. Think I'll make one myself."

"Then wish," Nora crisply suggested, that the tardy old train will come along, to carry us out of this dreadful place."

"As to that," the big man, calmly replied, "I'm not so sure now that I want to go."

Nora gasped and immediately returned to her former frigid demeanor.

"I was just wondering," he said conversationally, "how you are going to get over to the train when it does come without ridding those dainty spats. And your thin shoes won't be much protection I fear in a walk through the water."

"You mean," Nora asked unbelieveably, "that we have to board the train over there?"

"I'm clad for the occasion, you see," he said smilingly, "so topboots are not always a disadvantage."

"Whatever shall I do?" she murmured, troubled.

"They can't expect passengers to wade through a lake."

"It's evident," the man said, "that neither did the officials expect this flood. And few passengers it seems stop off at just this spot. However, don't you worry, we'll think of a way."

And, marvelously, at his tone of assurance Nora abruptly ceased to worry.

He would find a way, as he had said. She regarded the stranger's broad figure admiringly as he again strode thoughtfully down the platform. Why couldn't the men of her world possess this man's quality of inherent strength and power, she wondered. They were nice boys, the boys she knew, attentive escorts of polished refined appearance. She could fancy the incredulous expression of Tommy Brisbane's face, for instance, if he might see her now in easy conversation with this roughly clad chance acquaintance of a rural station.

"There's the train whistle," the big man said. "Is that little handbag your only luggage? Well, if you'll pick it up we will cross."

Nora picked up the handbag and was in turn immediately and as easily picked up herself. It was not until the stranger had carefully deposited her upon the raised ledge of hand beside the incoming train that she found her scattered senses sufficiently to say: "Thank you."

For surely he had saved her an uncomfortable perplexing time. The pearl spats were still immaculate and as the big man snatched the felt hat from his head in acknowledgment, he at once relieved her of his presence.

The unusual assistance has been, she smilingly told herself, most gracefully and thoughtfully given.

Nora upbraided her friend, Elizabeth, however, when that young person met her at the journey's end.

"Never again," she admonished, "invite me to visit you when I have to come by train route."

Elizabeth laughed.

"Why there are lots of interesting things there in the junction section," she said, "incidentally some interesting people there to meet. As soon as the road is passable Brother Bill will insist on driving you over to meet his old college friend, now the noted civil engineer who is putting through the big new railroad. He has a picturesque shack near the junction and Bill adores him."

And later when Nora, after Bill's proud introduction, stood looking up into the face of her remembered station-platform companion the kind, twinkly eyes smiled suddenly down into hers.

"That was a trustworthy little first robin," the big man said. "He has made my wish come true—in bringing you back."

fraternal student-homes planned in the near future for the University of Missouri is that to be erected in Columbia by the Odd Fellows, according to a project presented to the Missouri Grand Lodge at its recent meeting in Sedalia.

The home is expected to cost in the neighborhood of $250,000 and is planned not only to furnish students a place to live but also to be of assistance to students who may find themselves financially unable to attend the University.

The new building will be erected near the University. Work is expected to begin next year. The local lodge of the Odd Fellows will meet in the new building, which is planned to provide well equipped lecture rooms, banquet halls and recreation rooms. A swimming pool is expected to be one of the attractive features of the building.

JIMSEY GOT $500 FROM BABLER

AMOUNTS, $500 EACH, GIVEN CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR.

LIEVED IT WAS CLEAN

or Says State Chairman Had Promised Him Aid in His Campaign for Governor.

Springfield, June 7.—E. E. Mc-Jinsey, candidate for the Republican nomination for governor, issued a statement here Saturday night, admitting that he received two contributions of $500 from Jacob Babler, a local figure in the Lowden "slush"
and exposure in Missouri, but said he believed the money to be a personal contribution from Babler.
McJinsey issued the statement before leaving for Chicago to attend the Republican national convention.
Telegrams from Chicago Saturday night stated that a candidate for the public nomination for governor received $1,000 of the Lowden money and this candidate was not Arthur Hyde.

F. A. Wightman, McJinsey's campaign manager, was asked last Wednesday if he knew of any Lowden money being received here from Bab-ler or his associates, the question being put to him after the announcement by Babler that Roscoe Patterson of Springfield, Republican state committeeman and candidate for congress from the seventh district, had received $1,000 from the Lowden fund.
Wightman presented an emphatic "I don't know" to all questions.

McJinsey was asked Saturday if he favored a clean-up of the Republican party in Missouri, the housecleaning to include the resignations of Nat Goldstein and R. E. Moore of St. Louis as delegates to the Republican convention and the abdication of Babler and Cole from boss positions in the party. He declined to discuss the matter.

Mr. McJinsey's full statement follows:
"Mr. Babler gave me early in January two personal checks for $500, which I understood was in fulfillment of a voluntary promise on his part, made four years ago when he urged me to become a candidate for governor. He said then he would be glad to make contribution to help to bear expenses of the campaign and this statement was renewed when it became known that I had definitely decided to become a candidate this year.

"I had no knowledge or intimation that this contribution from Mr. Bab-ler was in any way connected with Governor Lowden's campaign for the presidency and I am sure Mr. Babler did not so understand or intend it."

"I accepted Mr. Babler's contribution as I have accepted the voluntary contributions of a few friends, some of whom are Democrats in Springfield and a few friends in other quarters of the state with no obligation except the implied one on my part to conduct a vigorous straight forward campaign for the gubernatorial nomination and with no strings on me if elected.

"At the proper time my campaign manager, Mr. F. A. Wightman, will make a full and detailed statement of every dollar used in my campaign as well as the source of all outside aid.
My books are open at all times, which means I have nothing to conceal. I believe the public will feel that I have just grounds for not being ashamed of those who have taken an honest interest in my political ambitions to help voluntarily in bearing the inescapable burdens of a primary campaign extending over a period of many months and in one of the very big states of the union."

Pocket Edition Typewriter.

London, June 7.—First among the wonders of the Agricultural Hall Business Exhibit is an 18-ounce typewriter, which is only a few inches long and fits into a coat pocket easily.

Second came a machine guaranteed to figure automatically 4 pounds 13 shillings and 10 pence "halfpenny" into yen, kroner, marks, francs—anything—instantly and accurately, even in these days of intricate inter-national exchange problems.
There is also an alleged silent typewriter."

A STORY

By BETTY MCINTYRE.

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Say, I'd be willing to wager that you couldn't earn one hundred dollars in one month, Ned Towne. You know that you have never had to do anything but call on your dad for cash, and that is some different proposition from earning it. I am ready to bet a cool thousand that you can't do it; are you game?"

The speaker blew a cloud of smoke into the air and smiled as he had a mental picture of the fashionable Ned Towne in overalls earning the one hundred dollars.

"I say, Grant, do you really mean that?" and Ned rose from his easy chair and perched on the end of the table.

"Bet your life I mean it; want to take me on it?"

"I know I have never earned a cent in all my life, but dad didn't want me to work; but I'll take you and I'll show you that I can earn it."

The other half-dozen young men seated in the clubhouse gathered around and all the details were arranged. The month began the next morning, and Ned, eager to show the fellows what stuff he was made of, rose early. He hadn't the least idea what he could do and for the first time in his life he scanned the want ads in the morning paper. One after the other he discarded them, realizing just how little he was fitted to do. But like an oasis there was one thing that he knew he could do.

Bolting the rest of his breakfast he rushed out of the house and was soon in the next city. Once there he had no difficulty in securing the position. For, despite the fact that the man who had advertised for an instructor to teach his two daughters to ride horseback, was one of the "new rich," he knew breeding when he met it.

"Ruh, what a cinch; guess I can get a job? I'll say I can." And Ned patted the sleek side of the splendid horse that was to be his in his new position.
According to the arrangements no one was to know what he was doing to earn the money, and although he missed the many hours of ease he had been having every day he was enjoying himself greatly. The two girls were good-looking, wholesome young ladies and learned to ride with ease and grace.

One morning, after he had held his position for three weeks, the elder of the girls wanted to ride downtown, through the crowded streets, just for the excitement, and of course Ned was to ride with her. Now it chanced that very morning that Ned's fiancée had asked him to ride in her new car, and on the plea of important work for his father, he had excused himself.

Fate, ever busy, arranged in a crowded street of the city a motor with a charming young lady at the wheel and almost beside it a fine-looking couple on horseback, who chanced to be laughing over the antics of a burly-gurdy monkey. Yes, that is right; Ned, Miss Sefton and his fiancée. Happily unconscious of any complications, Ned was stricken dumb when he found himself looking into the troubled blue eyes of the girl he loved.

Coralie James returned his ring with a short note that terminated the engagement, and all his efforts to see her were unavailing. At the end of the month he returned to the club with the hundred dollars he had earned, and amid the cheers of his friends he collected his thousand dollars.

And Fate, still busy, arranged a dance where both Ned and Coralie were sure to go. All the evening Ned watched for a chance to approach Coralie to explain, but she avoided him. About midnight a dozen couples gathered on the veranda and someone suggested that Ned, ever famous as a good story teller, tell a story. A happy thought struck him: he would tell his own story of the past month and thus be telling a story and explaining to Coralie at the same time. A hasty glance told him that none of the club fellows was in the crowd, so, seating himself so that he could see Coralie he told his story, adding his explanation to her thus:

"And the young fellow did not tell his fiancée, for she did not approve of betting, and of course he had to tell her something about that morning, and of course she couldn't understand," and then, like all good story tellers, he had them reconciled and happy ever after.

After the applause the crowd returned to their dancing and Ned asked Coralie to dance. When she nodded her "yes" he led her, not in the dance, but to a secluded part of the veranda.

"Ned, dear, forgive me."
"Sweetheart, it is you who must forgive me," he whispered. "Tell me that I am forgiven, Coralie."

"Oh, my Ned, of course you are forgiven, and if you must bet then confine your bets to me. I'll wager two neckties that you don't dare kiss me in this light."

"Done—and you lose." And he kissed her not once but many times, and by the expression on Coralie's face she was glad that she lost.

Dangerous Reading.

"I say, Mirandy, that gal of ours is gittin' too much knowin' in her read-in'. Do you know what kind of books she's bringin' home?"

"Law sakes, Jake, she only reads what her teacher tells her to."

"Then that woman ought to be ashamed of herself to let the gal learn all about them forin ways.
Why, that there book was called
'Winmin of the French Saloons.'"

How Farm Production Is Geared to Demand

SINCE the discovery of petroleum, the per capita production of wheat in the United States has more than doubled, and this in the face of a constantly decreasing percentage in our farm population. The products of petroleum have been largely responsible for the increase.

In 1850, 90 percent of our people lived on farms; in 1919 only 33 percent of the population was listed as rural.

In 1850 the per capita production of wheat was 4.4 bushels, while in 1919 it was almost 9 bushels.

On the farms of the Middle West—the bread-basket of the nation—the gas engine is best known. And here this engine is plowing, seeding, and harvesting by the square mile instead of by the acre, and it is doing the work better, quicker, and cheaper than it could be done by horse-power.

These engines must have gasoline, and they must have oil, both products of petroleum.

That is why the U. S. Government declares that "petroleum is a basic necessity, as much so as wool or wheat."

The manufacture and distribution of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products, have been developed to a high degree of efficiency by the Standard Oil Company (Indiana).

This organization, trained by years of experience to anticipate unheralded conditions, has been able to foresee and prepare to meet problems, which, unsolved, might have proved disastrous.

Even transportation and other troubles in allied industries have failed to make an appreciable interruption in the steady flow of products from the refineries of the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) to the consumers of the Middle West.

DOGS ASSIST LONDON POLICE

Well-Trained Animals Have Been Found of Great Help in Apprehension of Criminals.

The present wave of crime has given an impetus in Great Britain to the training of dogs for police purposes.

Police dogs were used to assist in bringing the breaker of laws to justice before the word police was ever known. In older days bloodhounds were used on the borders of Scotland in certain districts infested by murderers and robbers, and a tax was laid on the inhabitants for maintaining them; also there was a law in Scotland that whoever denied entrance to one of these dogs should be treated as an accessory to the crime.

The training of these dogs calls for a large amount of patience, intelligence and resource, far removed from the old idea of dog breaking, which was usually to beat the animal mercilessly into the observance of a few set rules.

It is step by step in his daily lessons that a dog gradually becomes a tracker of criminals by their scent, pursues escaping prisoners, discovers missing people or finds suspected ones in concealment.

He learns fearlessly to seize and pull down any aggressor, whether his master or himself be attacked, and to do it with the least possible damage, coaxing at once when the enemy gives in.

The popular conception of the police dog is a wild, savage brute, which probably accounts for the antipathy to his use displayed in some quarters, and it is well that the public should realize that the properly trained dog is at all times perfectly under control.

ONE THING THEY OVERLOOKED

British Military Authorities Forget the Humble Printer in Desire to Preserve War Secrets.

The marquis of Hartington tells an episode from the war days when the spy scare was at its height, according to a writer in the Halifax Chronicle. Certain confidential information that the military authorities wanted to keep absolutely secret was sent round by trusted couriers in locked dispatch boxes, with elaborate precautions of signing and countersigning and checking every stage. No one below the rank of major general was entrusted with the knowledge, and even these were bound by tremendous oaths of secrecy.

After a time it was found that these weighty documents, which were circulated in printed form, were being set up by ordinary printers, who were under no obligation to preserve secrecy, and in fact took no precautions whatever against leakage. However, nothing did leak out, but the military mandarins, it is said, shuddered when they realized the risks that had been run.

Getting Ready for Channel Tunnel. The gigantic task of moving back the railway station platforms through-out the Great Northern system to allow the passage of continental trains when the channel tunnel is opened has been begun, the Daily Mail is informed.

"The work of making the stations to fit the trains will take several years," said an official. "It means that every platform in both freight and passenger stations will have to be altered."

The distance the platforms are being set back is two inches. This will allow a good clearance for the continental sleeping cars, and also the large freight cars.

The "gauge" (the distance between the rails) of the continental trains is roughly half an inch wider than the British standard, but the shaping of the tread of the wheels makes it possible for trains of both British and continental system to run on the same track without risk of accident.

When He Died, He Died All Over. "Doggone!" said Jesse Eschbach, chief examiner for the state board of accounts, as he read one of the letters in his mail. "Here is one."

The letter told of a man who had paid his dog tax to the township assessor and the ungrateful car had gone and died. The dog died before the assessor had turned in his books to the county assessor and the inquirer wished to know whether there was any way to get back the dog tax.

"The cruel law," Mr. Eschbach will reply, "states that taxes are paid on property owned March 1."

"That'll raise a howl!" he added verbally.—Indianapolis News.

Desert Land and Desert Sea.

A portion of the Journey between Sydney, the New South Wales capital, and Broken Hill, the mining heart of Australia, lies over waterless hot country. Lieut. Sydney Pickles, who has shown the feasibility of an air service between the two cities, saw no landmark as he crossed the barren stretch and so had to use his compass. Describing the pioneer flight, he compared the interminable rolling land before him to the gray lonely wastes of the North sea which he had patrolled in his seaplane.

Got Rid of Pesticiferous Fly. Health authorities at Saranac Lake, N. Y., declare that this probably is the first "flyless town" in the world. Despite the unusually hot weather of last June and July, there were scarcely any more flies in the town than most places have in January. It cost about $1,000 to eradicate the fly nuisance, which was accomplished by requiring that manure be screened and frequently removed.

ENJOYED TOBACCO IN SCHOOL

In the Seventeenth Century It Was Common for the Children to Use the Weed.

The latest diatribe against women smokers—by "a doctor to a famous life insurance company," according to the London paper which publishes it—classes the tobacco habit among women as an evil of modern growth. But when tobacco first reached England it was enjoyed in common by both sexes. In the seventeenth century, according to John Ashton, "it was not only usual for the women to join the men in smoking, but in Worcestershire the children were sent to school with pipes in their satchels, and the schoolmaster called a halt in their studies while they all smoked—he teaching the neophyte."

Scotch women used to enjoy a pipe the same way as they enjoyed a pinch of snuff. One of the compilers of the "Statistical Account of Scotland," published in 1791, records that "the chief luxuries in the rural districts are snuff, tobacco and whisky. Tea and sugar are little used, but the use of whisky has become very great. The use of tobacco may almost be said to be excessive, especially among the female sex. There is scarce a young woman by the time she has been taught to spin but has also learned to smoke. Smoking seems to have been introduced as an antidote to rheumatism and ague. The favorable alteration with respect to these diseases has only produced a greater avidity for tobacco."

TO REVIVE HOME INDUSTRY

Good Work Done by Knitters During the War Has Given Impetus to New Movement.

What was accomplished by the vast volunteer army of knitters during the war is one of the creditable facts in the history of the world upheaval through which civilization has been passing, says the St. Louis Globe Democrat. But for the millions of devoted women who kept the needles flying the horrors of the trenches would have been still more frightful and deadly. The achievements of the knitters have suggested the organization in New York of a society for the revival of home industry and domestic art. Its first move is to gather all the spinning wheels within reach and look up practical instructors in the use of a household implement that had become but an antique piece of furniture. Mantel piece weavers as well as plovermen, and spinning at home is one of the oldest forms of industry. In the cabins of American pioneers the spinning wheel was a necessity, and kept busy in what, by a stretch of imagination, were called spare hours. Those were the days of homespun textiles because often no others were to be had.

Find New Kind of Animal.

Captain Phillips, writing from British Ruanda, in the Tanganyika territory, states he has shot a specimen of an hitherto unidentified species of duiker. The animal is about the size of a large goat, and is known as an eppo or eppuyi by the natives, to whom it is in a way sacred as being the totem-beast of Musungu, the now reigning chief of Musungu, the country of Ruanda, over the greater part of which a mandate was recently given to Belgium by the peace conference.

The eppo lives in the bamboo forests of Mount Sabiro and other mountain forests, and seldom comes into open country. It often takes refuge in the low and broad forks of large trees. The creature has a stumpy tail, arched horns, and marsh hooves; in color it is a rufous black, and has a bright yellow stripe along about half of its back. In the case of the present specimen, which was, apparently, healthy, part of the back was nearly bald of hair.—London Times.

Plane That Is All Wing.

A system of airplane construction which is being developed and particularly adapted to large craft appears on its face not only interesting but plausible and practical, provided the location of the weight is not detrimental, says a report by J. H. Colwell, published in the Journal of the Patent Office Society. Broadly stated, the system comprises a hollow plane aeroged into the fuselage so that the large trussed wing spars, the engine housings and fuel tanks, as well as the pilot, are inclosed within the lifting surface itself. The center of the plane between the upper and lower walls is deep, while the wings taper to small depths toward the tips. The entire machine, including the pilot's car, is practically a part of the lifting surface, thereby necessitating comparatively few external wind resisting parts.

He Rode Free.

The rear platform of the car was crowded with poor business men in starched collars and rich laborers in overalls. There would be nothing unusual in that if one of the overboard party had not given the crowd a lesson in declivity.

"See, I've got a dime," he told the conductor.

The conductor nodded.

"I'll pitch it. Heads you get the dime or tails I ride for nothing."

The conductor nodded again and the coin flamed the air.

"Tails," announced the overboard one triumphantly, and he took his place with the rest of the crowd.

New Idea in Ventilation.

The Ayrton antigas fan, which, according to Munsey's Magazine, may revolutionize all our systems of ventilation, is based on the principle that a fan should be brought down sharply from the perpendicular to the horizontal, and thus drive the air forward in steady puffs and set up a fresh current from the rear. The inventor, who is an Englishwoman, has given public demonstrations in London with glass models of ducts and tunnels from which the fan readily expels the smoke. At one demonstration, Mrs. Ayrton, with a three-inch fan, set at one end of a six-foot table while smoke poured forth from a funnel at the other end. The action of the miniature fan not only dispelled the smoke but quickly gained such control over it that it prevented it from coming out of the funnel. The fan works on the heavy spring principle and is constructed of light material. It has been used successfully in factories, theaters, mines and sewers.—Youth's Companion.

Airplanes in Mining Operations.

It is predicted that the airplane and the dirigible will prove a great stimulus to the mining industry in presenting a means of getting material and men to and from locations which are known to be rich with ore and which are at the present time inaccessible. There are many such places known to exist, but the cost of building a roadway to them would be so great as to be prohibitive. Attention to this phase of the subject has been recently attracted by a report made by Doctor Lyon, supervisor of the mining stations for the United States bureau of mines. By this means a regular communication could be maintained with sections which are not to be reached by any ordinary means. It is also suggested that the same means might be of great value for getting rescue apparatus to the scene of mining disasters.

Cats and Diphtheria.

"It is a widely accepted belief that cats may suffer from diphtheria and convey the infection to human beings," says the Journal of the American Medical association in recounting the experiments by which Doctor Savage proved that this is entirely without foundation.

Doctor Savage planted vast numbers of diphtheria bacilli in the noses and throats of kittens, but in no instance did these take the disease, and within 24 hours the bacilli were dead. Doctor Savage reviewed all the evidence in connection with epidemics of diphtheria and came to the conclusion that so far as it implicates cats it is quite valueless.
